

Ivy Holcomb Vinton Bridge

Ivy Holcomb Vinton Bridge, a former resident of Stamford for more than 50 years, died Monday, Jan. 2, at her sister's home in Baltimore, Md., after a brief illness. She was 92.

Born July 10, 1902, in Boston, she was a daughter of the late Elnora Holcomb and Harry Francis Vinton.

She was the wife of the late Dr. John Bridge, a professor of classics at City College of New York.

A former schoolteacher in Whitingsville, Mass., and Simsbury, she was a president of the Parent-Teacher Association at Rogers School in Stamford. She was active in bringing the hot lunch program to Stamford schools in the 1930s, a relative said. She was also active in Planned Parenthood.

She was survived by a son, Josiah Bridge of Stamford; a daughter, Catherine Abt of Baltimore; three sisters, Lois West of Braintree, Mass., Eleanor Alboupolis of Braintree, Mass., and Mary Caton of Green Valley, Ariz.; and six grandchildren.

Friends may make contributions to Planned Parenthood.

Burial and funeral services will be private.

Mitchell-Wiedenfled Funeral Home in Baltimore handled the arrangements.
